

English Literature Exam Question

"How does Macbeth speak and behave at this point in the play? Refer closely to details from the extract to support your answer. the extract in question is the soliloquy in Act 1 scene 7." [15 marks]

This extract takes place at the end of the first act, building up to Macbeth's fatal attack on sleeping Duncan, orchestrated by his wife, Lady Macbeth.

At the beginning of the extract, Macbeth uses euphemistic language when weighing up the consequences of "the assassination", and Duncan's "surcease success". This skittish way of avoiding calling this (regicide) what it is shows Macbeth's discomfort in killing his kind-spirited leader, he knows treason is wrong. Macbeth also uses these euphemisms to show his double sided nature, highlighted in his use of alliterative sibilance when saying "surcease success", conveying the idea of how Macbeth lulls Duncan into a false sense of security and preys on him like a snake. This also shows both Duncan's and Macbeth's natures and the "double trust" Duncan has in his subject. At this point, he still has a moral compass and this is seen in his avoidance of calling this a treacherous act against the natural order.

Secondly, Macbeth mentions how this act of regicide could cause him to "jump the life to come"; implying his levelheadedness and acknowledgement of the risks murdering such an important figurehead in his society could have. This quote could be interpreted to suggest Macbeth is concerned about not being accepted into heaven when he dies due to this colossal sin he would be committing, destroying the natural order and peace Duncan created in Scotland, which would show his (Macbeth's) self-centred nature. It could be said that this quote has a sense of irony, as appointed kings were seen as God incarnate, and Macbeth sets out to kill this 'God', despite fearing true God's judgement on his actions after death. The verb "jump" within this quote has a childlike and gentle sense to it, which could show that Macbeth thinks that killing Duncan and obeying the witches by helping make the prophecies come true is just a game, showing his naivety as he doesn't fully take into account the negative consequences this sacrilegious act will have on his waking life.

Further into this soliloquy, Macbeth talks about the "bloody instructions" he is "being taught". He could be alluding to his submissive nature at this point in the play, as he is mainly contemplating killing Duncan due to Lady Macbeth and the Witches instructing him to. He's following the witches in the sense that they gave him prophecies that he would be king and he feels he has to be the one to fulfill it, and he's following Lady Macbeth as she is the one who "taught" him to act evil, at this point in the play she has significant power over him. This was seen as a contrast to the Jacobean woman, as they would have been meek and very rarely manipulative, and men would have had the upper hand. This flipped use gender roles could have indicated to Jacobean
