As previously explained, several or more than one individual settings, particularly as combinations or groups, may be used together. Figure 10 shows a typical lighting control system. The system consists of the group of 16 dimmer ballasts as well as the 16 ballast control stations. In this particular system, there are 16 ballast control stations, each with a ballast control station and a ballast control station. The ballast control stations are connected to the ballast control stations. The ballast control stations are connected to the ballast control stations. The ballast control stations are connected to the ballast control stations.

Figure 2 presents another view of the network. Since we used the network tool with the Shortest Path algorithm, nodes in the network are ordered along their size. The size of the nodes reflects their degree and centrality. The nodes are ordered according to the number of connections to other nodes in the network. The nodes are ordered from the most connected node (the node with the highest degree) to the least connected node (the node with the lowest degree). The nodes are ordered from the most central node (the node with the highest centrality) to the least central node (the node with the lowest centrality). The nodes are ordered from the most important node (the node with the highest importance) to the least important node (the node with the lowest importance).
