

UNIT 7: Climate

LESSON 2: CLIMATE PATTERNS

Climate refers to the average weather conditions over a long period of time. The weather, however, refers to the conditions at a particular time and place.

Climate is determined by several factors, including latitude, altitude, and distance from the sea. These factors influence the amount of solar radiation received and the distribution of wind and ocean currents.

Temperature and precipitation are the two main elements of climate. They are measured over a long period of time, usually 30 years, to determine the average conditions.

Climate patterns are the result of these factors and elements. They can be described as hot, cold, wet, or dry. Climate patterns are important for understanding the distribution of life and human activities.

Climate Factors

Latitude	Altitude
Distance from the sea	Wind
Ocean currents	Clouds
Vegetation	Soil
Human activities	Global warming

Climate Patterns

Climate patterns are the result of the interaction of the various climate factors. They can be described as hot, cold, wet, or dry. Climate patterns are important for understanding the distribution of life and human activities.

1. Hot and dry: This climate is found in the tropics, where the sun is high in the sky and the air is dry. It is characterized by high temperatures and low rainfall.
2. Cold and dry: This climate is found in the high latitudes, where the sun is low in the sky and the air is dry. It is characterized by low temperatures and low rainfall.
3. Hot and wet: This climate is found in the tropics, where the sun is high in the sky and the air is wet. It is characterized by high temperatures and high rainfall.
4. Cold and wet: This climate is found in the high latitudes, where the sun is low in the sky and the air is wet. It is characterized by low temperatures and high rainfall.
