Kramer, 1991 The City of Elgin Fire Department had experienced a history of misdirection with regard to its rules and regulations There were contradictions to other doctrine unclear procedures and outdated material due to lack of review and operational standards were in some cases nonexistent Policies were generated by individuals without a clear statement of the problem or input from other staff officers There was no clear system by which policy could be formulated disseminated and enforced Text written for use within the fire service industry point out definitions of terms used such as policy standards and rules but the how to section of construction is left to the entity drafting the doctrine It is understood that each organization with its special needs is going to draft policy Most writings therefore explain policy rules and regulations but leave the system utilized by each organization to the doctrine's author The literature review does contain terminology and some contradictions since authors view policy as a doctrine used to conduct business Yet another defines it as general statements Conducting business in general fashion sounds somewhat misleading The point is that policy is a system which requires specific behaviors It lends itself as a tool for the fire service manager in order to maintain control over broad and diversified areas of responsibility A team was formulated to devise a system which would incorporate doctrine to obtain specific behaviors The team views policy as an umbrella system which contains orders directions rules regulations and standard operating procedures The system compliments our program areas of the city budget system and lends itself to ease of use by our personnel It is a living document which undergoes constant revision All personnel were trained on each area of the manual and each page within each area Once accomplished the manual was put into effect The training eased the cultural shock often experienced with something new We found that the developed system lent organization fairness and reason for actions Personnel knew the answers to who what when where and how and most importantly WHY A living document requires constant review We found that the review process keeps staff on top of changes and they monitor for areas which can be enhanced or modified Policy enforcement became easier since staff officers maintained a ready awareness of policy and possible areas of difficulty No system is perfect therefore constant monitoring is required to prevent overlap inconsistency and maintain updated information It is recommended that any fire service organization maintain a structured policy system Ensure consistency of documents utilized specifically by your organization and associated city village departments which pen such documents as city rules Police and Fire board rules etc Establish a process for explanation of policy between labor groups and management Ensure a process is in place to obtain employee input and that they receive appropriate answers Submit your document to your legal counsel and City Manager or Mayor Most importantly conscious effort must be made to maintain a living document You must have a system of review and update STAR 37128 General, manual of operations Los Angeles (Calif.).
