

2. The keyword k must occur at least M_2 times in some sense i , where M_2 is some predefined minimum value.
3. Select at most M_3 number of keywords for a given sense i if the number of keywords satisfying the first two criteria for a given sense i exceeds M_3 . In this case, keywords that co-occur more frequently (in terms of absolute frequency) with sense i of word w are selected over those co-occurring less frequently.

Condition 1 ensures that a selected keyword is indicative of some sense i of w since $cp(r|k)$ is at least some minimum probability M_1 . Condition 2 reduces the possibility of selecting a keyword based on spurious occurrence. Condition 3 prefers keywords that co-occur more frequently if there is a large number of eligible keywords.

For example, $M_1 = 0.8$, $M_2 = 5$, $M_3 = 5$ when LEXAS was tested on the common data set reported in Section 4.1.

To illustrate, when disambiguating the noun "interest", some of the selected keywords are: expressed, acquiring, great, attracted, expressions, pursue, best, conflict, served, short, minority, rates, rate, bonds, lower, payments.

3.1.3 Local Collocations

Local collocations are common expressions containing the word to be disambiguated. For our purpose, the term collocation does not imply idiomatic usage, just words that are frequently adjacent to the word to be disambiguated. Examples of local collocations of the noun "interest" include "in the interest of", "principal and interest", etc. When a word to be disambiguated occurs as part of a collocation, its sense can be frequently determined very reliably. For example, the collocation "in the interest of" always implies the "advantage, advancement, favor" sense of the noun "interest". Note that the method for extraction of keywords that we described earlier will fail to find the words "in", "the", "of" as keywords, since these words will appear in many different positions in a sentence for many senses of the noun "interest". It is only when these words appear in the exact order "in the interest of" around the noun "interest" that strongly implies the "advantage, advancement, favor" sense.

There are nine features related to collocations in an example. Table 1 lists the nine features and some collocation examples for the noun "interest". For example, the feature with left offset = -2 and right offset = 1 refers to the possible collocations beginning at the word two positions to the left of "interest" and ending at the word one position to the right of "interest". An example of such a collocation is "in the interest of".

The method for extraction of local collocations is similar to that for extraction of keywords. For each

Left Offset	Right Offset	Collocation Example
-1	-1	accrued interest
1	1	interest rate
-2	-1	principal and interest
-1	1	national interest in
1	2	interest and dividends
-3	-1	sale of an interest
-2	1	in the interest of
-1	2	an interest in a
1	3	interest on the bonds

Table 1: Features for Collocations

of the nine collocation features, LEXAS concatenates the words between the left and right offset positions. Using similar conditional probability criteria for the selection of keywords, collocations that are predictive of a certain sense are selected to form the possible values for a collocation feature.

3.1.4 Verb-Object Syntactic Relation

LEXAS also makes use of the verb-object syntactic relation as one feature V for the disambiguation of nouns. If a noun to be disambiguated is the head of a noun group, as indicated by its last position in a noun group bracketing, and if the word immediately preceding the opening noun group bracketing is a verb, LEXAS takes such a verb-noun pair to be in a verb-object syntactic relation. Again, using similar conditional probability criteria for the selection of keywords, verbs that are predictive of a certain sense of the noun to be disambiguated are selected to form the possible values for this verb-object feature V .

Since our training and test sentences come with noun group bracketing, determining verb-object relation using the above heuristic can be readily done. In future work, we plan to incorporate more syntactic relations including subject-verb, and adjective-headnoun relations. We also plan to use verb-object and subject-verb relations to disambiguate verb senses.

3.2 Training and Testing

The heart of exemplar-based learning is a measure of the similarity, or distance, between two examples. If the distance between two examples is small, then the two examples are similar. We use the following definition of distance between two symbolic values v_1 and v_2 of a feature f :

$$d(v_1, v_2) = \sum_{i=1}^n \left| \frac{C_{1,i}}{C_1} - \frac{C_{2,i}}{C_2} \right|$$

$C_{1,i}$ is the number of training examples with value v_1 for feature f that is classified as sense i in the training corpus, and C_1 is the number of training examples with value v_1 for feature f in any sense. $C_{2,i}$ and C_2 denote similar quantities for value v_2 of
