Department of Transportation,2006 Evaluation of Wildlife Crossing Structures and Fencing on US Highway 93 Evaro to Polson Amanda Ruth Hardy,2007 The US 93 reconstruction project on the Flathead Indian Reservation in northwest Montana represents one of the most extensive wildlife sensitive highway design efforts to occur in the continental United States The reconstruction will include installations of 42 fish and wildlife crossing structures and approximately 15 mi 24 km of wildlife exclusion fencing for a total investment of over 9 million dollars This report documents the success of using a context sensitive approach to collaboratively redesign a rural highway within a multiple use landscape that accommodates the needs and concerns of different institutions cultures and priorities Further this report introduces baseline field data collection methods and results that are being used to evaluate how the wildlife crossing structures and wildlife fencing affect deer and bear vehicle collisions and movements in a multiple use rural landscape The preconstruction data summarized here and in combination with complementary post construction data will address the following goals of the evaluation study 1 determine what effect US 93 wildlife crossing structures and fencing have on the frequency of animal vehicle collisions and successful animal highway crossings 2 document the design decision making processes and lessons learned as a case study and 3 identify best management practices and further research These issues are addressed via a literature review of important considerations related to locating designing and evaluating the effectiveness of wildlife crossings and exclusion fencing a case study and project history summary and synthesis of field data collection efforts overview of other relevant and repeatable field studies and a discussion about the measures of effectiveness and post construction data collection recommendations The ultimate value of the information in this report will be realized when the reconstruction is complete and post construction field data is collected to comparatively assess the effect of the wildlife mitigation on the parameters of interest identified in the goals Perhaps one of the most important insights gained from the preconstruction research is that due to the myriad sources of unquantifiable variation in the environment many years of monitoring are necessary to make valid inferences Given the paucity of long term before after field studies assessing the effects of wildlife exclusion fencing and crossing structures on wildlife and driver safety the US 93 wildlife mitigation evaluation when completed will provide useful results lessons learned and best management practices to guide other wildlife mitigation efforts in the future Forest Road Management Guidebook ,2000 planning for concentrated implementation of highway safety countermeasures john a olson, joseph c marsh iv,1971 Watershed Management Field Manual ,1986 Unique 3-in-1 Research & Development Directory ,1982 Montana Code Annotated Montana,2016 Strategies to Mitigate the Impacts of Chloride Roadway Deicers on the Natural Environment Laura Fay,Xianming Shi,Jiang Huang,2013 TRB s National Cooperative Highway Research Program NCHRP Synthesis 449 Strategies to Mitigate the Impacts of Chloride Roadway Deicers on the Natural Environment documents the range of methods tools and techniques used by transportation agencies to minimize the environmental impact of chloride based roadway deicers Publisher s description Superelevation Distribution Methods and Transition Designs James A.
