Chapter 2: Developing Successful Marketing Strategies Langley Green Gardens

"We're never going to get this plan approved, Luke. I mean, look at our marketing objective: it is not even in line with the president's overall goal for the company." Amanda Patel glanced down despairingly at the document that she and her assistant, Luke Saunders, had just spent several weeks developing. The deadline for submission of the 2009 Marketing Plan to the president was only two weeks away. Somehow she and Luke were going to have to rework their entire draft plan before that deadline. At least, that is what she was thinking at that moment. "Look, I am really upset right now. Why don't we get together this afternoon after I have had time to settle down a little?" Luke quickly agreed and left Amanda's office with the promise to return right after lunch.

Amanda sat back in her chair and reviewed events of the past few weeks. How had she managed to back herself into a corner like this and how was she going to get out of it?

Amanda was marketing manager of packaged seeds in the Consumer Products Division of Langley Green Gardens Limited in Vancouver, British Columbia. Langley was a medium-sized, private firm that had been in business for over twenty years. The founder, Gordon Lee, still owned and operated it, and acted as president. It had started as a seed company, supplying both the consumer and business market with high quality vegetable, fruit, and flower seeds. Over the years Langley had expanded into small plants, fertilizers, gardening tools, and other similar, related products. Overall the company was successful, due largely to Gordon Lee's business acumen.

Two months previously, Gordon had called a meeting of all managers to discuss the planning cycle for the next fiscal year. He had already mapped out the overall corporate goal for next year in conjunction with his two senior managers, and now he wanted to share this with his other managers. Gordon had analyzed a great deal of data in preparing the corporate goal. He believed that the current economic turmoil, originating south of the border and now affecting the Canadian economy, was going to continue, and he believed it would exert a negative influence on Langley. He presented his overall target for next year: a revenue increase of +3% in dollar sales. Gordon did not believe the company could expect any volume increase and was forecasting the +3% based solely on a price increase of the same amount. "This is a
