full continuum of necessary programs is unavailable and staff development remains deficient limited cost effectiveness seems inevitable as long as related interventions are carried out in isolation of each other and limited systemic change is likely as long as the entire enterprise is marginalized in policy and practice This state of affairs calls for realigning policy and practice around a unifying and cohesive framework based on well conceived models and the best available scholarship Initiatives for mental health in schools must be connected in major ways with the mission of schools and integrated into a restructured system of education support programs and services This means braiding resources and interventions with a view to ensuring there is a system of learning supports that meets overlapping needs and does so by fully integrating mental health agenda into school improvement planning at school and district levels Policy and practice must end the marginalization of mental health in schools Six appendices include 1 A New Freedom Commission on Mental Health Recommendations 2 Reframing How Schools Address Barriers to Learning 3 Some Natural Opportunities to Enhance Mental Health at School 4 Guidelines for Mental Health in Schools 5 Examples of Policy Statements for a Unifying Approach in Schools and 6 Examples of Provisions in Federal Law that Allow Districts to Redeploy Federal Resources to Improve Systems Contains 18 exhibits
