Job Seekers' Perceptions

Abstract

In today's digital age, organizations are relying more on online platforms to recruit job applicants instead of using traditional recruitment methods. Organizations are adapting their practices to meet the needs of younger workers. However, the perceptions of these job seekers towards job portals may vary depending on several factors. Thus, the purpose of this study was to identify the factors that influence the perceptions of young job seekers toward job portals. The study used the quantitative research approach and data was collected through a survey questionnaire from a sample of 250 young job seekers. The findings of the study revealed that information quality, perceived ease of use, perceived usefulness, perceived trustworthiness, and extended services have a significant influence on young job seekers' perceptions of job portals. Extended services, perceived usefulness, perceived ease of use, and information quality seem to be the strongest predictors out of the five variables. This leads to the conclusion that job portal providers must pay close attention to their online recruiting simplicity, quality of information, and extended services if they want to attract additional clients. Companies should also prioritize offering accurate and comprehensive job descriptions and making sure the portals are user-friendly. The implications of the study provide valuable insights for job portal providers to enhance their services and increase their user base among young job seekers. This study provides practical and theoretical insights for job portal service providers, companies, and individuals seeking employment.

Keywords: E-recruitment; Job portals; Young job seekers.
