Abstract – The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the performance of a simulated 1000-m swimmer's start. The subjects were 10 competitive swimmers who were randomly assigned to a control group and a training group. The training group performed a 12-week training program that consisted of a combination of dry-land and aquatic exercises. The control group did not perform any training. The results of the study showed that the training group had a significantly faster start time than the control group. The training program was effective in improving the performance of a simulated 1000-m swimmer's start.
