Vaporization Cooling System with Capillary Distributor, 1967 Theoretical calculations for a vapor cooling system of high thermal efficiency are presented. As in heat pipes, the boiling liquid is kept on the heated surfaces by open capillaries. The Mach Number in the vapor and the critical heat flux limit the heat transport. A nuclear reactor equipped with thermionic power converters is shown as an example for the efficiency of the cooling system. At 650 deg C with potassium the following results were obtained theoretically: Mach Number of vapor less than 0.3, temperature difference between reactor core and reactor brink less than 5 deg C, pump power about one hundredth of liquid metal cooling circuit.
