Mastering the Practice of Music Duncan Haynes,2019-11-24 For music students of all ages and levels their parents and music teachers Applicable to any instrument While teaching at university in Peru in the early 2010s I became aware that even the most motivated of my students didn't seem to be making the progress I expected given their talent and the time they put in and began to ask myself why This led me to reflect on my own practice methods and it struck me that I didn't remember learning how to learn I certainly realised that I'd wasted so many hours in pointless frustrated repetition over the years before begrudgingly allowing my own process to evolve So I asked myself What are my guiding principles How do I put them into practice Where did they come from Do they really show results I dived into the available literature to see if my methods aligned with those of the experts in the field and the outcome is this anthology of techniques and mental models Mastering the Practice of Music synthesises my professional experience advice from the masters old new and ongoing research in the field I hope you find it as invaluable as I have
