

Long-Term Care INSURANCE

WHAT IT IS

Long-term care insurance is designed to help pay for long-term care services, like those provided in nursing homes, assisted living facilities, or at home.

HOW IT WORKS

Long-term care insurance works by paying a monthly or annual premium. In return, the policyholder is eligible for a daily, weekly, or monthly benefit towards the cost of long-term care if they cannot perform certain activities of daily living (ADLs).

WHY BUY IT

People buy long-term care insurance to manage the high costs of long-term care services like those in nursing homes or assisted living facilities. It provides financial protection and peace of mind that care needs can be met without depleting personal or family savings.

WHAT DOES IT COVER

Long-term care insurance generally covers services in various settings, such as nursing homes, assisted living facilities, and at home. In addition, it may pay for skilled nursing, rehabilitation, personal care services, and sometimes even services like meal delivery or transportation.

WHEN TO BUY

It's often suggested to consider buying long-term care insurance in your mid-50s to mid-60s, as premiums are more affordable and the chances of being declined for health reasons are lower. However, individual circumstances and needs can affect the best time to buy.

HOW MUCH IT COST

The cost of long-term care insurance varies depending on factors like the age and health of the policyholder when the policy is bought, the amount of the daily benefit, the length of the benefit period, and any optional benefits chosen. Premiums could range from $100 to $300 monthly.

WHO CANT GET IT

Disqualifications for long-term care insurance typically include feeble health, certain pre-existing conditions, and age limits. Specific criteria vary by the insurance company.
