

PARTICLE THEORY AND STATES OF MATTER

What is the basic structure of matter? Understanding the nature of matter and the arrangement of particles is fundamental. The arrangement and movement of particles explain various properties of the matter.

Particle Theory is the theory that all matter is made up of tiny particles. These particles have three characteristics of particles: mass, volume, and space between them. These particles are constantly moving and are attracted to each other. These particles are very small, invisible, and cannot be seen with the naked eye.

States of Matter Matter can exist in three primary states: solid, liquid, and gas. Each state has different properties. Solids have a definite shape and volume. Liquids have a definite volume but no definite shape. Gases have neither a definite shape nor a definite volume.

Changes of State Matter can change from one state to another. These changes are called changes of state. They are caused by heating or cooling. For example, melting is the change from solid to liquid, and freezing is the change from liquid to solid.

Properties of Matter The properties of matter are determined by the arrangement and movement of its particles. For example, the density of a substance is determined by the mass of its particles and the space between them. The ability of a substance to flow is determined by the space between its particles.

Intermolecular Forces There are forces of attraction between particles. These forces are called intermolecular forces. They are responsible for the cohesion of particles in a substance. The strength of these forces varies from solid to liquid to gas.

Diffusion Diffusion is the process by which particles of one substance mix with the particles of another substance. It occurs because the particles are in constant motion. Diffusion is faster in gases than in liquids, and faster in liquids than in solids.

Evaporation Evaporation is the process by which liquid particles escape from the surface of a liquid and become gas. It occurs because some liquid particles have enough energy to overcome the intermolecular forces and escape.

Condensation Condensation is the process by which gas particles lose energy and become liquid. It occurs because the gas particles lose energy and are forced closer together.

Boiling Boiling is the process by which a liquid changes to a gas throughout the liquid. It occurs when the liquid is heated to its boiling point and the vapor pressure equals the atmospheric pressure.
