

LOADING

1
Open the back of the camera by sliding up the LOCK button and swinging out the hinged cover.

2
Place a KODAPAK Cartridge in the camera with the larger cylindrical end down and toward the lock button, as illustrated.

3
Close the back of the camera by pressing the back against the body until it locks. The film speed is now automatically set. The film name and number of exposures per cartridge appear in the WINDOW on the back of the camera.

4
Push the FILM ADVANCE lever toward the front of the camera and allow it to return; repeat until the lever locks (about a dozen full strokes). The appearance of a series of arrows in the center of the window indicates that the film is advancing toward the first exposure.

The number that appears in the center of the window on the back of the camera (the same number may appear in duplicate) serves as your exposure counter. Important: Disregard this exposure number when advancing film; the film advance lever must always be operated repeatedly until locked, otherwise the shutter release cannot be depressed.

UNLOADING

1 After the last picture, operate the film advance lever until all of the yellow paper has been wound past the window before you open the back of the camera. The appearance of an "X" in the center of the window indicates that the film has been exposed, but that the backing paper has not been wound into the take-up chamber.

2 Slide up the lock button and open the camera.

3 Lift out the cartridge and close the camera. For processing, send entire cartridge.

NOTE: Do not remove the cartridge from the camera until all the yellow paper, with the "Xs," has been moved past the window; otherwise several exposures will be "light-fogged." Removing and replacing partially-exposed cartridges, even under darkroom conditions, may result in loss of one exposure.
