The influence of medieval building activity on relief development within the Spessart uplands, Germany Julian Trappe, 2022-11-21 In the Spessart a low mountain range in central Germany a feud during the Middle Ages led to the construction of numerous castles in this region This study analyzes the mutual influence of paleo relief development and medieval building activity using a geomorphological and geoarchaeological multimethod approach to expand the knowledge of human environmental interactions during this time For this purpose GIS based terrain analysis and geophysical measurements were conducted and combined with sedimentological information to create 1D 3D models of the subsurface and to assess knowledge of the landscape and relief evolution at various medieval castle and mining sites The interpretation of all these data led to the answering of numerous site specific questions on various geomorphological geoarchaeological geologic and archaeological topics that have been explored in this work and have greatly increased our knowledge of each study site In addition to these key contributions to the archaeological and geomorphological interpretation of individual study sites a quantification of the anthropogenic influence on the relief development was conducted a generalized model of the influence was derived and new methodological and interpretative approaches were developed Overall this study links geomorphological geological and geo archaeological investigations at five medieval sites and delivers important information on human environmental interactions within the Spessart and beyond

Phenomics John Doonan, Marcos Egea-Cortines, 2018-11-08 Phenomics is an emerging area of research whose aspiration is the systematic measurement of the physical physiological and biochemical traits the phenome belonging to a given individual or collection of individuals Non destructive or minimally invasive techniques allow repeated measurements across time to follow phenotypes as a function of developmental time These longitudinal traits promise new insights into the ways in which crops respond to their environment including how they are managed To maximize the benefit these approaches should ideally be scalable so that large populations in multiple environments can be sampled repeatedly at reasonable cost Thus the development and validation of non contact sensing technologies remains an area of intensive activity that ranges from Remote Sensing of crops within the landscape to high resolution at the subcellular level Integration of this potentially highly dimensional data and linking it with variation at the genetic level is an ongoing challenge that promises to release the potential of both established and under exploited crops
