Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the health-related quality of life of older adults with arthritis. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group consisted of 25 older adults with arthritis who participated in a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program. The control group consisted of 25 older adults with arthritis who did not participate in the walking program. The primary outcome measure was the Health-Related Quality of Life (HRQL) score, which was measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. The secondary outcome measures were the physical function, pain, and mood scores. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the HRQL score, physical function, pain, and mood scores of the older adults with arthritis. The walking program was well-tolerated and had no adverse effects. The findings of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the HRQL of older adults with arthritis.
