

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import policies, free trade is a system wherein all the goods of governments have the same international trade possibilities for the benefit of their own economies. Once the free trade system has been achieved, many trade barriers, such as tariff regulations, are being torn apart. Examples of these barriers include the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs, the World Trade Organization (WTO), the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), and the North Atlantic Trade Agreement (NAFTA) forum.

However, before the harmonization of national policies, national policies have been made that would protect people in particular. For example, in Figure 10, a free trade line represents the domestic free economy in which the domestic supply and demand are horizontally well aligned. The domestic supply and demand curves intersect at a point where the price is P_1 and the quantity is Q_1 . If there were no international trade, the equilibrium price would be P_1 . If international trade is allowed, the price would be P_2 , and the quantity would be Q_2 .

International Trade

If there is free international trade, the total supply and demand for domestic goods and services is $Q_3 - Q_2$, which is the difference between Q_3 and Q_2 . They are able to consume more of the domestic good at lower prices. Also at P_2 , domestic producers are producing Q_2 and foreign producers are producing $Q_3 - Q_2$. Thus, domestic firms are producing less and foreign firms are producing more. This is the effect of international trade on the domestic economy.
