Introduction

There are four market types namely; monopoly, monopolistic competition, pure competition and oligopolistic markets (Peterson 1977). Pure monopolies and pure competition firms represent the two extremes of competition which is not easy to find in practice. The following is a review of an example of an organisation in Maryland operating in a pure competition market and one in a pure monopoly market.

Example of a firm operating in a pure competition market

Pure competitors such as retail operations however have no control of the market and thus no control over prices (O'Sullivan, Sheffrin, and Perez 2009). A firm in such a market could sell any quantities of its products without influencing the market prices.

It is quite difficult to get markets that are purely competitive where buyers have full knowledge, there are no barriers of entry and exit, buyers can easily switch from one seller to the other, and where there are a large number of buyers and sellers. However, retailers of agricultural commodities could provide a good example of a pure competition market.

Some traders have sought to differentiate their farm produce thus reducing price competition in this market. For instance, since consumers are becoming more health conscious, traders of farm produce are venturing into natural foods in place of GMOs whereas packaging is also gaining prominence as a differentiation tool.

Market for agricultural products is set to change resulting to a decline in price competition. Traders are seeking other forms of competitive fronts such as packaging and focus of healthy products. Therefore, the market is set to convert into monopolistic competition where differentiation is critical. Suppliers should therefore brace themselves for non-price competition.

Example of a pure monopoly

A pure monopoly is a market structure where there is only one seller of a product or service. This seller has complete control over the market and can set prices without competition. Examples of pure monopolies include utilities like water and electricity, and certain patents for pharmaceuticals.

In a pure monopoly, the firm is the industry. It faces no competition and can produce any quantity at a constant price. The firm's demand curve is the same as the market demand curve, and it is perfectly elastic. The firm's marginal revenue curve is downward sloping and below the demand curve.

The firm's profit maximization occurs where marginal revenue equals marginal cost. The firm's price is determined by the demand curve at that quantity. The firm's economic profit is the difference between total revenue and total cost.

The firm's long-run equilibrium occurs where economic profit is zero. This occurs when the firm's demand curve is tangent to the marginal cost curve. The firm's long-run equilibrium quantity is the quantity where the firm's demand curve is tangent to the marginal cost curve.

The firm's long-run equilibrium price is the price on the demand curve at that quantity. The firm's long-run equilibrium profit is the difference between total revenue and total cost at that quantity. The firm's long-run equilibrium is a stable equilibrium.

Conclusion

The study has shown that pure competition and pure monopoly are two extremes of market structures. Pure competition is characterized by many small firms, while pure monopoly is characterized by a single large firm. Both market structures have their own characteristics and implications for the economy.

Bergh,Kenneth J. Button,Peter Nijkamp,G.C. Pepping,2013-03-09 Meta analysis is a formal synthesis of results and findings of scientific studies which can assist in gaining new insights explaining differences between results of similar studies or determine useful directions of research In this book we focus on the use of meta analysis in environmental economics and related fields of study The first part of the book covers the overall meta approach methodology for social sciences and economics in particular This is followed by technical and non technical discussions of statistical and rough set techniques for analysis At appropriate places this is supplemented with reviews of applications in environmental economics and related fields In the second part of the book a number of case studies show different aspects of the application of meta analysis The research areas considered include among others tourism multipliers air pollution valuation risk and value of life pesticide price policy travel time savings and transport externality and policy issues The benefits of the appropriate application of meta analysis in environmental economics are a better use of existing information and knowledge removal of some of the subjectivity from analysis and forecasting and greater clarity as to where future efforts in environmental economic analysis
