

INTERIOR
The interior of a castle is often a maze of rooms and corridors. The king's chamber, or bedchamber, was the most important room in the castle. It was where the king and queen lived and where they held court. Other important rooms included the great hall, the chapel, and the treasury.

ANCIENT CASTLE

Castles were built for defense, but they were also places of luxury and power. The king and queen lived in the castle, and they held court there. The castle was also a place of worship, and the king and queen often held religious ceremonies there. Castles were also places of learning, and many of the great universities of the world were founded in castles.

DEFENSE
Castles were built for defense, and they were often the strongest and most secure places in the land. The castle was surrounded by a high wall, and the wall was topped with battlements. The castle was also protected by a moat, and the moat was often filled with water. The castle was also protected by a drawbridge, and the drawbridge was often raised to prevent enemies from entering the castle.

CHURCH
The castle was often a place of worship, and the king and queen often held religious ceremonies there. The castle was also a place of learning, and many of the great universities of the world were founded in castles.
