Mosaics has little in common with most other books of recreational mathematics. Though it contains much for the reader to marvel at and wonder about, it is far from being just another book of mind-bending puzzles. It is more in the nature of a story of discovery and adventure in hitherto unexplored regions of the fascinating universe of numbers and patterns. As the story unfolds, the reader is drawn into it and soon becomes a member of the exploring party. The problems which feature in the book are intriguing in themselves, but the focus is not so much on obtaining the right answers as on the numerous and ingenious ways of arriving at the solutions. The approach adopted is similar to that often used in the past by old masters like Fermat, Euler, and Gauss, to name a few. The critical examination of raw data initially invokes a response in the form of a conjecture which is then refined and tested in wider and wider fields. The book abounds with illustrative examples and illuminating diagrams, and throughout it the search for universals continues like a powerful undercurrent, as master keys are forged which work under all manner of changing conditions for solving a variety of problems, often without the need for calculations. This is a book which lovers of number lore will surely relish.

Scientonomy: The Challenges of Constructing a Theory of Scientific Change Hakob Barseghyan, Paul Patton, Gregory Rupik, Jamie Shaw, 2022-02-08 During the so called historical turn in the philosophy of science philosophers and historians boldly argued for general patterns throughout the history of science From Kuhn s landmark Structure of Scientific Revolutions until the Scrutinizing Science project led by Larry Laudan there was optimism that there could be a general theoretical approach to understanding the process of scientific change This optimism gradually faded as historians and philosophers began to focus on the details of specific case studies located within idiosyncratic historical cultural and political contexts and abandoned attempts to uncover general patterns of how scientific theories and methods change through time Recent research has suggested that while we have learned a great deal about the diversity and complexity of scientific practices across history the push to abandon hope for a broader understanding of scientific change was premature Because of this philosophers historians and social scientists have become interested in reviving the project of understanding the mechanism of scientific change while respecting the diversity and complexity that has been unveiled by careful historical research over the past few decades The chapters in this volume consider a particular proposal for a general theory of how scientific theories and methods change over time first articulated by Hakob Barseghyan in The Laws of Scientific Change and since developed in a series of papers by a variety of members of the scientonomy community The chapters consider a wide range of issues from conceptual and historical challenges to the posited intellectual patterns in the history of science to the possibility of constructing a general theory of scientific change to begin with Offering a new take on the project of constructing a theory of scientific change and integrating historical philosophical and social studies of science this volume will be of interest to historians philosophers and sociologists of science     Mosaic Laurie Blass, Meredith Pike-Baky, 1990

Seeing, second edition John P. Frisby, James V. Stone, 2010-04-02 An accessible yet rigorous and generously illustrated exploration of the computational approach to the study of biological vision Seeing has puzzled scientists and philosophers for centuries and it continues to do so This new edition of a classic text offers an accessible but rigorous introduction to the computational approach to understanding biological visual systems The authors of Seeing taking as their premise David Marr s statement that to understand vision by studying only neurons is like trying to understand bird flight by studying only feathers make use of Marr s three different levels of analysis in the study of vision the computational level the algorithmic level and the hardware implementation level Each chapter applies this approach to a different topic in vision by examining the problems the visual system encounters in interpreting retinal images and the constraints available to solve these problems the algorithms that can realize the solution and the implementation of these algorithms in neurons Seeing has been thoroughly updated for this edition and expanded to more than three times its original length It is designed to lead the reader through the problems of vision from the common but mistaken idea that seeing consists just of making pictures in the brain to the minutiae of how neurons collectively encode the visual features that underpin seeing Although it assumes no prior knowledge of the field some chapters present advanced material This makes it the only textbook suitable for both undergraduate and graduate students that takes a consistently computational perspective offering a firm conceptual basis for tackling the vast literature on vision It covers a wide range of topics including aftereffects the retina receptive fields object recognition brain maps Bayesian perception motion color and stereopsis MatLab code is available on the book s website which includes a simple demonstration of image convolution Coming Alive from 9-5 Careen Betty Neville Michelozzi,1988
