A Laboratory Manual of the Chemistry of the Metals Erastus G. Smith, 1895 A Manual of Qualitative Chemical Analysis (Classic Reprint) Augustus Beauchamp Northcote, 2017-09-13 Excerpt from A Manual of Qualitative Chemical Analysis The bodies which constitute this class are those elements known by the name of metals together with the gas hydrogen The metals are for the most part solid bodies although one mercury is liquid and thus forms a link between the solid basic elements and the gaseous one hydrogen From its close resemblance to the other basic elements this gas also is expected if ever sufficiently condensed to appear in the metallic form The metals are characterized by peculiar physical properties the Chief of which are metallic lustre and power of conducting heat and electricity but the first of these properties although frequently quoted as an unmistakeable proof of the metallic character of a body is so dependent upon the state of aggregation of its particles being entirely lost if the metal is reduced to a fine powder as to be of little value while the power of conducting electricity and heat is to be considered but doubtful evidence of metallic character Chemical characteristics are the best criteria of the basic nature of a body that is to say it must possess properties powerfully opposed to those of the acid elements About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
