Jackson, 2020-12-04 A critical approach to blackness in devolutionary Scottish writing Writing Black Scotland examines race and racism in devolutionary Scottish literature with a focus on the critical significance of blackness The book reads blackness in Scottish writing from the 1970s to the early 2000s a period of history defined by post imperial adjustment Critiquing a unifying Britishness at work in black British criticism Jackson argues for the importance of black politics in Scottish writing and for a literary registration of race and racism which signals a necessary negotiation for national Scotland both before and after 1997 Irvine Welsh Robert Morace, 2007-07-19 This book provides an introduction to the work of Irvine Welsh placing his fiction in historical and theoretical context It explores Welsh's biography his impact on contemporary Scottish fiction and the cultural relevance of his work Including a timeline of key dates it also offers an overview of the critical reception his work has provoked subject English Language and Literature Studies Literature grade A5 18 22 University of Glasgow Department of English Literature course Module T4 Postcolonialism Writing and Theory language English abstract While I was wearing out my grey cells recently trying to come up with a decent essay title I was unexpectedly aided by a bit of news A judge in Wales had acquitted a man of rape because the violated woman was so drunk on the supposed crime she could not remember whether she had consented to have sex with the suspect or not Although I strongly agree that no suspect should be convicted until there is unmistakeable proof this specific case made me think of the ways in which women are restricted in what they seem to be able to do If a woman is too drunk to say anything does that automatically mean consent or refusal This bit of news made me think of how often women seem to be voiceless even in a world like ours which can almost be described as a post feminism one It might well seem a bit absurd or unrealistic to look at the role of women in two novels which have been written by men maybe exclusively for men and where women hover at the periphery But it is exactly these particulars which make an analysis of Heart of Darkness and Marabou Stork Nightmares even more viable and interesting They are two very different works in terms of style period of conception and underlying ideologies What this study of the role of women in these novels will show hopefully is that although Conrad's and Welsh's novel seem to be so different altogether women and their roles and functions they hold within the structure of the narrative are quite similar This enterprise will most certainly prove to be difficult as women in both of the novels are excluded from the privileges of power attributed to patriarchy Part of this exclusion is voicelessness the other ignorance or rather no access to knowledge This does obviously not mean that the women in the texts do not speak at all They do speak but when this is the case it is only always in reaction to a man's word or action In other words to make out the woman behind the reactive voice might prove quite difficult as their person as such is only ever mediated through a male narrator

Choose Life. Choose Leith. Tim Bell, 2020-04-08 By examining the book the play and the film Choose Life Choose Leith both critically analyses the Trainspotting phenomenon in its various forms and contextualises the importance of the location of Leith and the culture of 1980s Britain Looking in detail at the history of Leith the drug culture the spread of HIV AIDs and how Trainspotting affected drug policy Leith and the Scottish identity the book highlights the importance of Trainspotting Choose Life Choose Leith acts as a reference book a record of the times and a background as to the history that led to the real life situation and the publication of the book
