CAMOUFLAGED MOTH CREATIONS

Camouflage is a type of adaptation that can be shaped by natural selection. Camouflage refers to the ability of an organism to blend in with its surroundings, making it less visible to predators or prey. This adaptation enhances the organism's chances of survival by reducing the likelihood of detection. Natural selection plays a crucial role in the development and persistence of camouflage in populations over time. Individuals with traits that provide effective camouflage are more likely to survive and reproduce, passing on those traits to their offspring.

Grades 8-12

PEPPERED MOTHS AND NATURAL SELECTION

During the Industrial Revolution in England, a famous experiment was conducted to study the process of natural selection. The peppered moth, scientifically referred to as Biston betularia, is a species of moth characterized by its mottled appearance. Prior to the industrial revolution, the peppered moth population consisted of mostly light-colored individuals, which closely resembled the lichen-covered tree trunks where they would rest. This adaptation is a type of camouflage called background matching. Because the moths shared similar color and pattern to the trees, they were difficult for predators to see.

However, the rise of industrialization in the industrial revolution brought about significant changes in the moth's environment. The increase in pollution caused by factories resulted in the darkening of tree trunks, making the light-colored moths more visible to predators. This change in the environment led to a shift in the survival advantages of different traits within the population.

Natural selection, the process by which traits best suited to an organism's environment become more common in a population over time, played a significant role in the peppered moth's evolution during this period. The dark-colored individuals had a genetic variation that allowed them to be better suited to their changing surroundings. The dark moths now had a survival advantage as they were camouflaged against the darkened tree trunks. They were less likely to be spotted and eaten by predators, giving them a higher chance of reproducing and passing on their dark-colored trait to their offspring. Over several generations, the population shifted from predominantly light-colored moths to predominantly dark-colored moths. The shift of the peppered moth population demonstrates the power of natural selection in response to environmental changes.
