

Leadership Development Paper

Studying leadership is important to me because I plan on becoming a Strength and Conditioning Coach and this field requires taking athletes through exercise programs to increase sports performance and reduce likelihood of injuries. Having a plan of movement and execution is only useful if the person implementing it can lead athletes through the program exactly how the coach imagined it. The importance of achieving physical feats in the weight room is only half the battle, we as strength coaches also develop the mind to promote leadership development, confidence, and grit. Studying leadership can help me promote willingness to work and efficiency with my student athletes in a weight room setting.

Developing leadership traits can propel me to new heights in my coaching career. Leadership is the process by which a person can direct, guide, and influence subordinate's behaviors and work to achieve a common goal (Juneja, n.d.). Some of the major characteristics of leaders include: intelligence, self-confidence, determination, integrity, and sociability (Northouse, Figure 2.3 pp 26-27, 2016). These are not the only traits that make a leader. However, these terms commonly arise multiple times throughout trait leadership studies between 1948-2004. Identifying major characteristics of leadership can help me improve my areas of weakness because studying a weak trait can promote improvement (Juneja, n.d.).

Leaders may serve different roles in an organization including: representing the organization, soliciting support, as well as being a friend, philosopher, and guide to subordinates. Leaders attend seminars, conferences, and general meetings to communicate the thoughts or ideas of the organization to the public and departments (Juneja, n.d.). As a strength coach, attending seminars and conferences are an important part of learning the latest trends and up-to-date information on coaching and exercise sciences to increase the value of the coach and organization.

Studying leadership will teach the importance of listening to athletes to identify shortcomings in an exercise program and implementation. Continuous feedback and reflection will promote growth in exercise programming and build improving relationships with athletes. According to Juneja, n.d., Leaders solicit support to subordinates through personality, intelligence, maturity and experience to allow invitations of suggestions to create plans and policies for an organization. This act of providing feedback and listening to employees that coaches serve will result in employees working more willingly and effectively.

Leadership is important at all levels of management in any organization. According to a separate article from Juneja, n.d called "Roles of a Leader", leaders at the top level formulate the plans and policies of the organization. At the middle and lower level management positions, it is required to interpret and execute said plans and policies. What is in
