

My Favourite Dish: Kamayan

4 pages | 986 words

Growing up, I was never thrilled about the idea of eating out and being in a room full of strangers. I used to find it uncomfortable, troublesome and a bit awkward, yet a meal out to my favorite restaurant was always an exemption as it never failed to bring comfort and amenity to me. Kamayan which translates to "eating by hands" is an authentic Filipino restaurant I was fond of since I was young. It is a 30-minute drive from where we used to live back in the Philippines. The building is identical to a traditional Filipino house- nippa hut or bahay Kubo which is made entirely of organic materials such as bamboos and other light woods, nipa palm used for its roof arranged precisely in place to give that tall and steeply shape with long leaves to its end. I remember every time I enter, I would be welcome by a pleasing and familiar smell of roasted suckling pig and grilled fish that lingers throughout the entire restaurant. Eyes are drawn immediately to the fish tank that sits on the far left corner of the place filled with colorful, fascinating and exotic fishes collected in different regions of the country. Surrounded by indoor plants and vines, it has an aesthetic that emphasizes the exquisite ambiance of the place and gives a tranquil feeling to it that transports me back to the simplicity of my childhood. One of their pride cuisines is my favorite Sinigang- a soup or stew distinguished by its pleasantly sour taste, yet savory flavor. Traditionally made with tamarind, the distinct flavor is made by boiling and crushing its fruit, the juice of which is crafted into the stew along with various vegetables and seasonings that adds kick as well as aroma to the dish. Though its main ingredient is tamarind, you can derive the variation of its sourness by adding or substituting it for guava which has a hint of sweetness that balances the sourness to it; or you can also use calamansi- a hybrid between a citrus and a lemon for a citrusy and a slightly bitter taste that is completely different from the other twos. It is prepared by boiling any type of meat stewed with tomatoes, garlic, and onion to add more flavor and color to the dish. Other vegetables can also be added to enhance the soup. Okra or gumbo which has a mild taste to it has a unique texture with peach-like fuzz on its outside and a small mucilaginous juice once it is cooked, with edible seeds on the inside of its pod. Water spinach is another ingredient with arrow-shaped leaves and pink flowers, almost all parts of its young plant tissue are edible, but the tender shoot tips and younger leaves are preferred. Yardlong beans cut into shorter sections and cooked like common green beans is also a great addition to the soup, with its edible pods that are crispy, tender and very tasty. Miso is another ingredient that gives sinigang its color. It is made from fermented soybeans and has a thick paste-like substance; a brownish and slightly reddish color...
